New issue of Going equipped, written by policing, for policing, now online

Issue 5 of Going equipped, the College of Policing's operational magazine, is now available online.

Going equipped is packed with informative articles, written and reviewed by officers and staff from all ranks and role, sharing innovative practice and ideas on emerging issues in policing.

In this Autumn/Winter edition, you'll find practice notes on a horse riders' volunteer scheme, tackling spiking in the night-time economy and analysing Linked Series firearms to reduce discharges.

You'll read about what it's like to be a custody detention officer, a digital investigator, a tutor constable or a police officer going to court as a victim of crime. And you can find out about telematics and an approach to neurodiversity training for frontline staff.

The long reads cover policing culture and the socialisation of student officers, as well as research on the likelihood of a missing person actively coming to harm. This edition's book review focuses on 'Listen' by Dr Kathryn Mannix, which looks at how the delivery of unwelcome news in the medical world is translatable into policing.

You can find all articles from Going equipped on Going equipped | College of Policing

Get involved

Your feedback helps us bring you the content you want to read. Let us know your views on Going equipped so we can improve what we do. Complete our short survey here.

If you'd like to contribute or be a peer reviewer, the Going equipped team would love to hear from you. Please email goingequipped@college.police.uk and let them know.